Enrollment At CVCC State's Fifth Highest

Central Virginia Community College has the fifth largest enrollment of the state's community colleges, a report on the Virginia Community College System revealed Saturday.

Enrollment for the college during the 1972-73 term was 3,902 but increased to 4,206 by the fall quarter of this year, when last tallied.

Northern Virginia Community College, which has five campuses in Alexandria, Annandale, Loudoun County, Manassas and Woodbridge, was by far the largest in the community college system with an enrollment of 13,674.

Other institutions with large enrollments are: CVCC; including Danville Community College, which registers 1,483 students; and Thomas Nelson Community College in Hampton, which enrolled 2,641 in 1972. Tidewater Community College enrolled 3,929 students on four campuses, and Western Virginia Community College in Roanoke, which had 3,483 students enrolled in 1972.

During the 1972-73 term, 94 per cent of CVCC's students came from the immediate Lynchburg area with another four per cent of the enrollment coming from out of state.

Altogether, the college awarded 183 associate degrees, certificates and diplomas.

The statewide system for the 23 community colleges received total income of $47,988,835 during the year and total expenditures of $42,576,044 and was slated to launch $17,096,578 in new construction at college sites during the 1973-75 term.
